'REAL' HAUNTED PLACES IN IL

By Ella D. and Jac Y.

News Reporters

Have you ever wondered what places are actually haunted, or have you ever wanted a terrifying tour of an actual haunted place? If this has ever crossed your mind even just briefly, this article is for you. In this article we will dive into four actual proven haunted places in Illinois going over bone chilling occurrences that lead them to be considered haunted as well as the horrifying events of their past. If this is something you want to hear, read further if you dare.

Ashmore Estates

Ashmore Estates is considered one of the most haunted places in Illinois, with many paranormal investigators picking this as their primary location. Many of the paranormal sightings include seeing full body apparitions and reports of hearing unusual things, such as screams. There has also been unexplained movement of objects followed by random cold and hot spots. But, what led to it being haunted? What led to it being haunted? Why is it such a hot spot for paranormal activity? If you want to know these things and more, continue reading here:

Originally named the Coles County Poor Farm, in 1870, the county purchased a plot of land where a brick building, known as the Almshouse. This was the original building built; the house had many residents who were referred to as inmates, many of those inmates died here. A burial ground was said to be located north of the property, and later, a second cemetery was built on the grounds. Superintendent Johua Ricketts recorded 32 deaths out of roughly 250 "inmates" in the Almshouse. In 1902, the commissioner of boards of charity visited and wrote that there was no supervision for the "insane" and mentioned none were locked up or restrained. They also condemned the facility, stating there were vermin-infected walls, rough floors, small windows, and improper ventilation with flies all over, including in the poorly prepared food. After this, the Almshouse committee received bids for a new fireproof house in early 1915.

A HISTORY OF THE OLD STATE HOSPITAL

By Lillian K.

Managing Editor

The Peoria State Hospital has an assortment of stories within its walls that many individuals may not be aware of. The facility itself was opened in 1902, but was originally established as the Illinois Asylum for the Incurable Insane. However, it closed its doors in 1973 due to the lack of funding and staffing issues.

Dr. George Anthony Zeller was a local surgeon who not only was the father of the institution, but also its superintendent. Zeller believed in providing the best work for his patients, which led to some practices that were not very common at the time. He didn't believe that any patient was "incurable," changing the name instead to Illinois General Hospital, but later on, it was changed to Peoria State Hospital.

The doctor was considered to be mad for refusing to lock up his patients. He removed bars from the doors and windows, discarded all types of restraints and had an open-door policy with an emphasis on treating humans with respect and showing empathy for them. Dr. Zeller openly refused to tie down or lock his patients to a piece of furniture.

Even with the new, gentle practice of Dr. Zeller, the hospital itself is marked by tragedy, suffering and a presence of sorrow. After the building's closing, the Peoria State Hospital became a popular attraction for paranormal activity.

GHOSTS: WHAT?

By Ashlyn F.

News Reporter

Ghosts have fascinated people for centuries, always being a mystery. Throughout history, people have reported seeing them, and many stories and legends have been created about them. One of the most famous stories revolves around the "Conjuring" house, with its dark history and reported paranormal activity, which has inspired an entire horror franchise.

The spirits have been around far longer than any 2000s movies, though. Historically, many cultures have established beliefs in ghosts. In East Asian cultures, they fully believe in ghosts. They share beliefs about spirits and ghosts, but they have different ideas about them. Some cultures believe in hungry ghosts that can be appeased with pleasant offerings, such as items they might desire. Others focus on respecting ancestors or have various spirits linked to places. Medieval England also believed in ghosts and the paranormal, with many references to spirits wandering the land. These ghosts were often seen needing help rather than being purely frightening.

Modern science, though, has a different perspective. For instance, mold and electromagnetic fields can affect our brains in certain ways. A civil and environmental engineering professor at New York's Clarkson University, Dr. Shane Rogers, investigated the link between haunted houses and mold.

He noticed what he calls "strange behavior" from his children after there was an exposure to mold in his basement. He would also watch TV series about haunted houses and noticed that many of them had signs of mold. Many of the symptoms that people experience from mold match the ones seen in personal ghost sightings.

Samuel Spencer, a London-based freelance writer, wrote an article called "The Science Behind Seeing Ghosts."

"According to the National Health Service, aspergillus mold, which is found in damp buildings, can cause shortness of breath and optic nerve inflammation, causing dark shapes to float across people's vision," Spencer said.

On the other hand, electromagnetic fields can cause disturbances in people's brain signals, causing them to have hallucinations.

"There is a theory that certain sound frequencies (around 19 hertz) can cause the human eyeball to vibrate slightly, causing optical illusions."

Regardless of scientific explanations, the phenomenon of ghosts remains a mystery. While some experiences can be explained by environmental factors, the true nature of ghosts continues to slip away from definitive answers. The lasting belief in ghosts across cultures and throughout history suggests

OPINION: A CASE FOR THE SUPERNATURAL

By Narissa H.
Voice Reporter

Although many people don't believe in ghosts and paranormal phenomena, the number of stories is increasing, and personal experiences suggest that there might be something real behind them. From what I have learned, I believe the supernatural is real, and we should start paying attention to it. If you watch a lot of paranormal movies, you would know that in many of them, they have "this is based on a true story" in the beginning. They do this because the movie is based on what happened in real life, showing that there is more than we know out in the world. This makes me think that maybe these "stories" aren't just made up to scare people, but real things that have happened to others, showing that there are still things in the world we don't fully understand yet.

Many people talk about their experiences on the internet, but not many share them in person because not a lot of people believe in the paranormal. Emma Henz has decided that she wants to share her story to help people really think about the chances that there is more out there. "It was 2016 at my house in Peoria. I was having paranormal experiences, but this one was the worst. I heard scratching in my closet. It wasn't my cat. I never really found out what it was, but I will never forget the sound of clawing against my closet door," Senior Emma Henz said.

I know a lot of other people have stories, but I decided to share one of my own. I was younger babysitting my little cousin, and we were in my basement, which was unfinished. I didn't like going down there at all because it looked scary, but we went to look for something. My mom had two of those plastic skeletons that people use for Halloween leaning on something. While we were looking at them, we saw one of the hands move upward, which didn't make sense because it was leaning on something and shouldn't have been able to move upward by itself. We both screamed and ran upstairs and didn't go back down there for the rest of the day.

When you decide whether you believe in ghosts or not, you have to think about the fact that there are both auditory and physical experiences that people have. From the experiences my friends have told me they had and from the one I had, I have chosen to believe in something more than we can see.

Within the property, Manuel A. Bookbinder is the most famous spirit, who happened to be an old patient of Zeller. The doctor would allow patients to work within their abilities. To add on, Bookbinder had the opportunity to work with the burial crew, so he did. These are the facts of Bookbinder; however, there are many conspiracy theories connected to the patient.

One story about Bookbinder tells about how he was referred to as "Ol' Book" because he used to lean up against an old elm tree in the nearby graveyard and would sob uncontrollably at each funeral, whether he knew the person or not. When time met Ol' Book, over 300 people attended his funeral, including over 100 nurses and the infamous Dr. Zeller--who delivered his eulogy. Bookbinder's casket was set on heavy boards across the empty grave, due to him being a bigger person. Despite this, when the time came to lower him into the ground, the men pulled very hard on the ropes holding his casket so the boards could be removed, but when they did, the opposite force happened. The casket flew into the air as if nothing was inside, and all those in attendance heard weeping coming from the graveyard elm. Looking over to the tree, there was Bookbinder, standing by the elm. The doctor insisted that the casket should be open; Bookbinder was no longer by the tree.

Throughout time, the elm began to rot, so Zeller sent someone to remove it. After a few tries, the worker returned to the doctor and informed him that every time he would hit the bark with his ax, he would hear cries, so he refused to partake any longer in the removal of the tree. Next, he had the fire department pay a visit to burn it to the ground, but that didn't work either. The chief of the department had to report back to the doctor that they had lit the tree on fire; however, they had to put it out after seeing someone crying through the thick smoke. Throughout a couple of tries, Zeller gave up, and the tree ended up falling over on its own approximately a year later. Ever since the falling of the elm, people walking by at night, claim to hear lingering cries in the distance.

Today, both the medical and paranormal legacy of the Peoria State Hospital live on. There is now a Peoria State Hospital Museum, and the museum offers a variety of tours that explain the history of mental health care. Visitors of the museum are able to engage in paranormal tours, while also getting the historical information component. They also offer vendor bazaars and Halloween attractions.

The attraction offers public and private paranormal tours, guiding you through popular paranormal hotspots both inside the historic buildings and in the cemeteries. The tours also provide equipment to join in on the paranormal experience, taking place from 8 p.m. to midnight. On the historical side, costumed actors are present, bringing the history to life right in front of those in attendance. Many documentaries, photos and stories are also available. For a person to set up a tour, it is best for them to go to the Peoria State Hospital website and message the owners to set up a visit to the local museum.

UNPACKING HORROR: THE SCARIEST HALLOWEEN MOVIES

By Emma H.
Voice Reporter

Ranking horror movie franchises is tough because each one brings something unique to the table. But, if I had to stack them up, here's how I'd do it.

The movie "Halloween" kicks things off because, without it, we might not have others. It's the OG slasher, and while some sequels get wild, the original's suspense is unmatched. Michael Myers is iconic to the horror genre, and Halloween wouldn't be the same without him.

Then comes "A Nightmare on Elm Street." Freddy Krueger is a very symbolic character, and the movies play with reality in a way that's super creative and scary. The dream aspect is what made this movie scary for me because the way he could only hurt you through them is terrifying.

Next up is "Scream." It revitalized the slasher genre in the '90s with its self-aware humor and clever skills. The killers were very smart with the voice changers, and the outfits were deceiving to the main character's significant others.

"Friday the 13th" is next; it's a classic for the sheer number of films with Jason Vorhees' unstoppable presence, and the undeniable fear of him finding you. Even if the stories can be a bit repetitive, they're still good.

Lastly, "Terrifier" is all-out gore and shocks. It's intense, no doubt, but might not have the same power as the others due to its extreme nature. It's a good movie, but it's so gory to the point that many people might not even want to watch it. It's definitely for a select audience.

So, while personal taste plays a big part, these rankings reflect each franchise's originality and overall scariness.

STAFF PICKS: ODDEST THINGS RECEIVED ON HALLOWEEN

By Staff

Shelby S. A pair of socks

On one Halloween, I received a fresh pair of new white socks. Though a rather odd "treat," I guess everybody could use it!

Anabelle R. A toothbrush

One year, when I was a 6th grader, I was given a toothbrush and told that I already had too much candy and would need to brush the cavities out.

Josie P. A can of soup

I was given a can of soup, while another person in my family received a ramen packet. We found it funny.

Evan P. A hole in my wall

Ty was mad that we stole his candy, so he pushed on my door while using the wall for leverage. His foot went through the drywall, leaving a giant hole in my wall.

Myles N. A metal water bottle

The water bottle malfunctioned and ended up spraying water all over.

Jacob S. A toothpick

I was going to pick up a pizza from Pizza Hut. When I finally got the pizza from the waitress and paid for it, she handed me a toothpicks and said Happy Halloween.

WORST CANDY TO RECEIVE ON HALLOWEEN

By Ayden B.
Voice Reporter

We can agree that there is no worse feeling than when you look at the candy you received and realize you got the worst kind imaginable. This list is from my personal experience on the worst candies I have received.

5. Whoppers- these candies are absolutely disgusting. Anyone who likes these needs to get checked out; they taste like wet cardboard. There is nothing enjoyable about these. I would throw these away the second I see them hit my bag.

4. 3 Musketeers- I know this one is controversial, but hear me out, this is just a lower-end candy bar you can receive. It is lower than mid if I got any other candy bar, I'd be fine with it, but these things just sit in my candy bag or are the first traded out.

3. Dots- I actually despise these things; they are just chewy globs of nothing, they taste like nothing, and they look so disgusting I would choose Mike and Ikes over these.

2. Circus Peanuts- These are just not something I would want as Halloween candy. I don't even know what's in them, and after like 2, you just feel disgusted I heard they are supposed to be banana flavored; if so they failed miserably.

1. Black licorice- This candy is the worst of the worst--just burn the bag. This candy is nasty and tastes like an old basketball shoe.

BLACK PHONE 2 REVIEW

By Rowan G.
Voice Reporter

When I first heard that "The Black Phone 2" was coming out, I was super excited. The first movie, honestly, is my favorite movie I've ever seen, so you can imagine my expectations were really high. The first one had such a creepy and emotional story with Finney, the Grabber and the phone calls from the other kids that it's stuck with me for a long time. I was hoping the sequel would deliver the same mix of heart and fear, and perhaps even more.

In the sequel, the story picks up not too long after the events of the first movie, while the first movie focuses on the ghost children contacting Finney through the black phone to try and help him escape the Grabber, the new movie focuses on the ghost of the Grabber reaching out to Finney via the black phone. There are many familiar faces, as well as new characters who bring fresh energy. The creepy atmosphere remains, and the jump scares definitely caught me off guard a few times. However, I think the sequel tried a little bit too hard to top the first one. While the first movie had an intense emotional pull, the second one felt like it was trying to be scary for the sake of being scary. It missed some of the deeper story that made the original movie so powerful.

Overall, I liked "The Black Phone 2," but I didn't love it as much as the first one. It's still a good horror movie with solid acting and a few very tense scenes, but it didn't hit me the same way. The first movie had that perfect mix of fear, sadness, and hope that made it unforgettable. This one was entertaining, but it didn't quite capture the same magic. If you love the first one like I do, then it's definitely worth watching, just don't expect it to be as good as the original.

bids for a new fireproof house in early 1915.

Later, the contract for the new almshouse was granted to J.W. Morgan. Not much is recorded after this except that a full-time caretaker and his family took turns on the property, living separately from the inmates in an old white farm house for supervision until 1959, when Coles Counts sold the property to Ashmore Estates. The corporation opened the property as a private psychiatric ward, which closed down just five years later due to debt. The institution reopened in 1964 and changed from a private facility to one that accepted patients from state mental facilities. In 1976, the facility once again had a change of ownership, where it was converted into a more modern place and was seen to have a brighter future, but after difficulties dealing with the Public Aid and Health over funding. The facility was forced to close in 1987 after exceeding $1.5 million in debt. tours in the offseason.

Afterwards in 1998, the property was bought by a community member who planned to renovate it, but this was made nearly impossible and fell through due to continuous vandalism. It then sat empty until 2006, when it was bought and turned into a haunted house and used for paranormal tours in the offseason.

The Congress Plaza Hotel

The Congress Plaza Hotel, located in Chicago, has housed many influential people, including presidents, during their stay in the windy city. Still open today, many wonder if this place is haunted? Are the accounts of paranormal activity that stretch decades really true? This is up to you to decide after reading this gripping description. Many deaths have occurred at the hotel, dating back to 1900 when a Spanish war veteran took his life. Then, in 1904, just 4 years after the first death, an elevator operator died when an elevator operator fell 70 feet down the elevator shaft to his death. Over the years, many deaths occurred, although the official number of deaths is not publicly known, it is speculated to be dozens. It is also noted that H.H. Holmes, who is more widely known as America's first serial killer, is rumored to have sought out victims in the lobby. Which would make sense since being that his "murder castle" was only a few blocks away. Al Capone supposedly also stayed there. Many people who have stayed there and in recent years have not been able to stay the night. On one occasion, two marines ran out in the middle of the night, stating there was a black figure terrorizing them in their room. Staff have also been reported to not give information about certain rooms and instead just mention they are too horrible to stay in. Things like ghostly figures, hands reaching out of the walls, strange noises, and objects moving by themselves have been reported. So, what do you think, is the Congress Plaza hotel actually haunted, or is this all just a bunch of made-up stories that happen to occur in a place where dozens have died?

McPike Mansion

During 1869, the McPike Mansion was built in Alton IL, on 15 acres of land by architect Lucas Pfeiffenberger and owned by the McPike family, where they lived till 1936. The mansion then changed hands many times since its original owner, Henry McPike. The house has been home to the Browns Business College and later on Paul Laichinger, who rented rooms out to occupants.

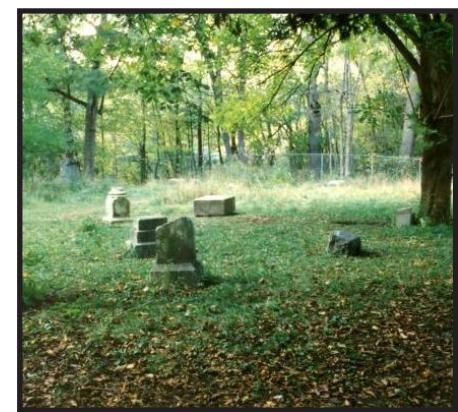

This home hasn't been occupied since the 1950's the weather and vandals brought damage to the architecture of the home, the house had 11 marble fireplaces and beautifully carved stairwell banisters, which had all been stolen and sold after explorers found the abandoned house. Since then, the newest owners, Sharyn and George Luedke. Who now have been trying to take this house back in time to when it was the best on the block.

Bachelor Grove Cemetery

In 1834 the first burial in Bachelor Grove happened, the cemetery having now over 80 tombstones though most are spares due to less upkeep and vandalism to the graves. The graveyard has more infant toys and small items scattered around the grounds some being by most of the infant graves.

The cemetery holds the hauntings of a lady walking through the graves to a farm house disappearing and more. The yard's haunting atmosphere comes from the landscape with a murky pond in the northwest corner and an overgrown chainlink fence running along some of the lands. Making this graveyard one of the most haunting hotspots in the area.

BEST PEORIA AREA HALLOWEEN HAUNTED HOUSES

By Jocelyn J.

Voice Editor

Throughout the Peoria area, there are many haunted attractions to get your yearly dose of scares. Now the question is which one is worth all of the hype. Given their high cost and limited hours of operation, it is challenging to visit all of them. As someone who has been to all of these haunted houses multiple times over the years, here is my ranking of the haunted houses in the Peoria area.

Blood Moon Manor

Located in Forest City, the first on the list is Blood Moon Manor. This one doesn't reach the same scare factor as the other ones. The scares felt predictable and too obvious. The scariest part was the injuries that happened in the haunted house. There were too many injuries when we went for it to be enjoyable. On the way out, something was hanging down that three people hit their heads on. Additionally, there was a bedspring mattress on the way out. When an actor scared Eric P. on the way out, he went sprinting in the direction of the bedspring, getting his ankle caught in it. This was made worse when someone else landed on top of him, causing him to limp for the rest of the night. Even if the scares were better, this would still be at the bottom just because of the injuries.

Spider Hill

Located in Chillicothe, the second one on the list is Spider Hill. It is better than Blood Moon Manor, but still not great. The only memorable thing was the "spinning tube" at the end. At the end of the haunted trail, there is a tube that makes the room feel like it's spinning. It makes you feel like you are about to throw up. For the price, it is not worth the hype. There are three trails, and you have to pay about $25 a piece for each trail. For that price, it is just not worth it. You could go to much better haunted houses for a much better price.

Aura

Located in Bartonville,

Aura is next on the list. It is the closest to us out of them all. Only a short 15-minute 15 minute drive to get to the haunted house. It is a bit pricey at $45, but the scares are so much more worth it than the others. Aura's lines move very fast and instead of standing in the cold, they let you sit in a building while you wait. The scares can be predictable from time to time, but still better than compared to the other haunted houses. Aura also offers a "Blackout Night", where you are in complete darkness and can only navigate through with a glow stick. My biggest critique, though, is that it could be a little bit longer. It feels too short for the price you pay.

Spook Hollow

Located in Marquette Heights, at the top of the list of list is Spook Hollow. For the price and drive, it is worth it. It is the second closest closetest out of all of them, and it only costs $30. There are three different haunted houses throughout the whole experience. There are areas outside and inside, and they use real actors and machines. They even send you alone into one of the haunted houses, which definitely adds to the horror. The scares don't seem predictable, and you are getting your money's moneys worth with the experience.

THE TOP MOST SCARY INJURIES IN SPORTS

By Lincoln P., Eric P. and Bradin B.
Sports Reporters

Derrick Rose

In 2008, the Chicago Bulls had one of their worst seasons in franchise history, leading to them collecting the number one overall pick in the 2008 NBA Draft, where they would draft Derrick Rose, out of the University of Memphis which made every Bulls fan ecstatic since not only were they in desperate need of a point guard but he was born and raised in Chicago which to Bulls supporters didn't get any better than that. After making the playoffs only once since Michael Jordan retired 10 years earlier, Derrick Rose led the Bulls back to the playoffs, bringing light back to the city for the first time in what seemed like forever.

They only made it to the first round but that didn't matter since the future was bright and was only getting brighter cause Rose that same year brought home rookie of the year in a landslide vote. And the season right after, brought them back to the playoffs for the second time in a row with his third season being the best season of his entire career, where Derrick Rose took home the coveted MVP Award at the age of 22, which is still the youngest age someone's ever done it in NBA history still to this day.

And in the 2011-2012 NBA season, he continued to be one of the best players in the league, leading the Bulls to the one seed in the Eastern Conference, where they would play the Philadelphia 76ers in the first round, and in game one, while up 12 with one minute left on the clock, Derrick Rose drove to the basket, hop stepped through the lane and on his landing tore his ACL. He immediately went to the ground and started grimacing in pain, holding his left knee. At the same time, the Bulls' medical staff huddled around him, leaving many fans wondering why he was even in the game in the first place, with the Bulls already destined to win.

Cam Skattebo

Beloved football fans all felt the pain of Cam Skattebo on Sunday, Oct. 26th. Phillies vs. Giants was an anticipated matchup after the first time the New York Giants shocked the football world, beating the dominant Philadelphia Eagles 34-17. Cam Skattebo was having a dominant rookie season with being a 4th round draft pick. Being in talks for Offensive Rookie of the Year talk, and his stats back it up. Cam has 410 rushing yards on 101 attempts this year, ranking him 3rd among all rookies despite missing a game due to his injury. Well, as ties another rookie in rushing touchdowns with 5.

Cam Skattebo's injury was devastating. Having a dislocated ankle leaves him out for the season. However, Cam surgery was a success, and he is recovering. However, the football world is not recovered from one of the most beloved players going down for the season.

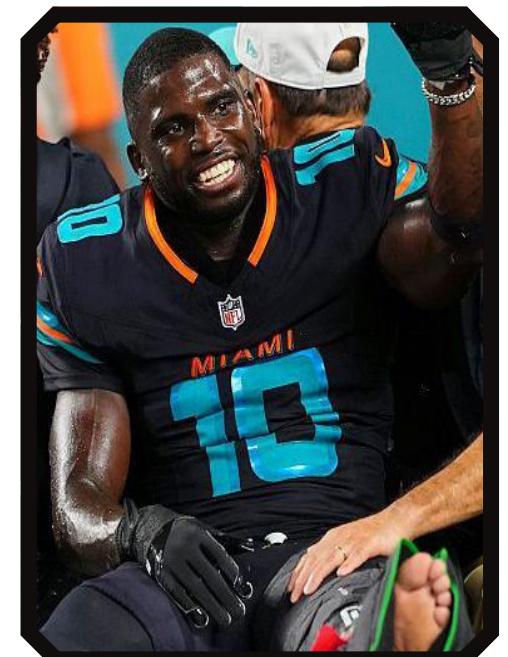

Tyreek Hill

A football player, Tyreek Hill, suffered an injury last month that almost ended his career for good. On Sept. 29, the athlete dislocated his knee and tore multiple ligaments, including his ACL.

The game where this occurred was when the Miami Dolphins versed the Jets; Tyreek Hill was tackled by Jets defensive back, Malachi Moore, in the 3rd quarter. As Moore tackled him, Tyreek's leg twisted backwards. After the game, he went into surgery and it was successful.

He was placed on injury reserve and is out for the rest of the 2025 season. Despite this outcome, Tyreek is at the age of retirement soon. The player has three children, and if he decides to retire, he will be able to focus more on his family while having a proper recovery.

'THE COUCH'S' FAVORITE HALLOWEEN TRADITIONS

By Staff

Tyler

My favorite Halloween tradition is going to parties after trick-or-treating. It's fun to trade out what candy you got on the stroll around town while watching scary movies. Usually, the party is at Evan Price's house, and at one of the parties, we locked Ty Basham's candy in the room with everyone, so he tried getting in the room, pushing against the wall, and that left a big hole in the wall. After the party, Evan had to explain to his dad why he was there and how it got there, then he had to go and get some plaster and other materials to fix the hole in the wall.

Topher

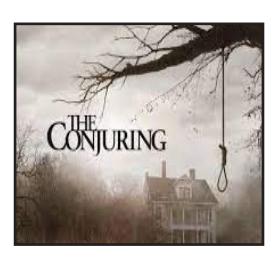

My favorite Halloween tradition is carving pumpkins; it's a tradition I've been doing since I was little. Growing up, my family and I would all get a pumpkin to carve. After we were done carving the pumpkin, my dad would bake the seeds, and we would eat them. Another reason I like carving pumpkins is the fact that you can be very creative with them. Many people have pumpkin carving contests to see who has the best pumpkin. At these contests, you can see some very creative and cool pumpkins, some people

Brody

My favorite Halloween tradition is trick-or-treating, going out with friends door to door, and getting candy. Seeing everyone else's costumes and how creative some get. Walking in the cold autumn air, brushing up against leaves on the wet concrete, laughter and smiles are present all around, while collecting candy, children dressed in their costumes. The mystery of what candy you pull out of your bag, and trading different candies with friends. Everyone eats their candy the next day until they eat so much that they start feeling sick.

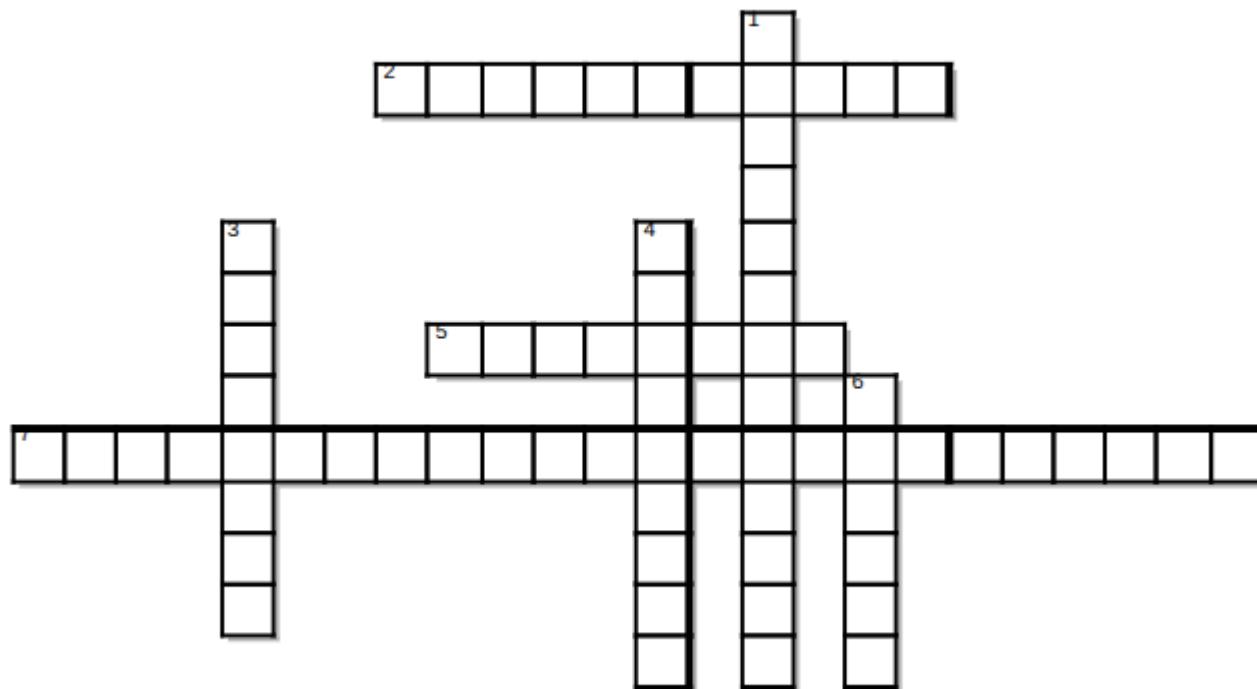

Nathan

My favorite Halloween tradition is to watch horror movies at home. Sitting on the couch with a bucket of popcorn and a blanket over me while watching horror movies, is a thrilling experience accompanied with comfort, and it is exactly why it's my favorite Halloween tradition. Although I have watched a variety of Halloween movies throughout the years, if I had to choose a Halloween movie it would be the conjuring, the eerie horror the film built up without showing much violence made the film more creepy to me compared to ruthless murder and gore, and the ending to the movie was just fantastic.
